

Barrel race continues tradition at Cattlemen's

There are a handful of barrel-racing events that take place in Gunnison every year, but the one everyone looks forward to most is the Watershed Legacy Barrel Race.

The annual Cattlemen's Days celebration will feature locals competing for prizes and bragging rights. The competition is set for Tuesday, July 13, at the Fred Field Western Center in Gunnison.

"This barrel race and Cattlemen's Days are huge," said Keri George, one of the local organizers of the event. "It's just something all the local people, ranchers included, look forward to every year because it's been going on forever."

That's true for most of the activities centered around Cattlemen's Days, which is celebrating its 121st year. The festivities are set to bring the community together before haying season begins, and it's something the locals and more look forward to each year.

It's especially true since most of the activities were canceled a year ago because of COVID. The barrel race did happen around the same time as the rodeo in September. Formerly the Watershed Barrel Race, organizers added legacy to it three years ago.

"We started the legacy because we wanted people who used to live here to be able to run during Cattlemen's Days.

Even if they moved away, they can come back and compete," George said.

"We draw a pretty good crowd, and we still have the Calcutta. We also do youth, which usually draws about 15 girls, and then we'll have at least 25 in the open."

There's an added benefit, too. The ladies with the top five times will compete during the Friday, July 16, performance of the rodeo. After the ProRodeo cowgirls make their runs, the five locals will have a chance to show off their talents and their talented horses. The fastest time of those five will be awarded a saddle.
